

Contents

Articles

John Bull

Introduction: ■ Nation, Nationhood and Theatre ■ — ■

Dan Rebellato

Nation and Negation (Terrible Rage) — ■

Chris Megson

“Can I Tell You About It?:” England, Austerity and “Radical Optimism” in the Theatre of Anders Lustgarten — ■

William C. Boles

Theatricalizing the National Housing Crisis in Mike Bartlett’s Game and Philip Ridley’s Radiant Vermin — ■

Lynette Goddard

#BlackLivesMatter: Remembering Mark Duggan and David Oluwale in Contemporary British Plays — ■

Ellen Redling

Fake News and Drama: Nationalism, Immigration and the Media in Recent British Plays — ■

Tom Cornford

Experiencing Nationlessness: Staging the Migrant Condition in Some Recent British Theatre — ■

Yana Meerzon

Multiculturalism, (Im)Migration, Theatre: The National Arts Centre, Ottawa, a Case of Staging Canadian Nationalism — ■

Camille Barrera

“For We Are American:” Postmodern Pastiche and National Identity in Anne Washburn’s Mr. Burns, a Post-Electric Play — ■

Ciara L. Murphy

'The State of Us:' Challenging State-led Narratives Through Performance During Ireland's 'Decade of Centenaries' — ■

Tom Maguire

The State We're in: Violence and Working-Class Women on and off the Contemporary Irish Stage — ■

Benjamin Poore

Before the Fall: Looking Back on the Royal Shakespeare Company's "This Other Eden" Season (2001) — ■

Christine Kiehl

From Chimera to Reality: Lucy Kirkwood's Chimerica or 'What State Are We in?' — ■

Cyrielle Garson

Does Verbatim Still Talk the Nation Talk? — ■

Chris Megson

■ Alecky Blythe in Conversation with Chris Megson ■ — ■

Liz Tomlin

A Victory for Real People: Dangers in the Discourse of Democratisation — ■